What's different about this professional learning?

Leading Through Learning coaches will immerse fellows in the innovative, research-based strategies that define exemplary classrooms. Fellows will define and guide their individual learning, steering the process where needed.

Leading Through Learning has a double meaning — teachers lead by empowering others to learn, and the best schools are defined by the learning experiences that move students forward. This experience will allow fellows to recognize and build on their own leadership skills, but choose an individual path for growth. Whether among students or parents, in the community, in the education profession, on teaching teams, or on committees or a school council, fellows will work with coaches to set leadership targets. Our design recognizes that 21st century leaders need to enable and inspire others to lead, too.

What's the expected outcome?

Fellows will experience new ideas and explore options with others in the program and the Leading Through Learning coach. Then, fellows will develop and refine a leadership project. In this setting, our process will showcase the fundamentals of project-based learning.

Fellows will be able to share their projects and experiences, advice, or teaching and learning strategies, through online videos, webcasts, conferences, or in other unique designs. The Leading Through Learning coach will be a support and guide through the process.

What will the cost be?

Leading Through Learning is designed by KASC and funded by a KDE Instructional Transformation grant. There is no charge for becoming a Leading Through Learning fellow. Travel expenses are the only cost that your school/district or you will incur. Fellows will be grouped by regions, and as you can see from the chart below, travel is kept to a minimum.

What's the time commitment?

Leading Through Learning will use a variety of formats to maximize the learning time while minimizing demands on your time. The chart below shows fellows' commitment with colleagues and the coach. Any additional time spent will depend on the design of a fellow's leadership project.
